DESERT JOSHUA TREES

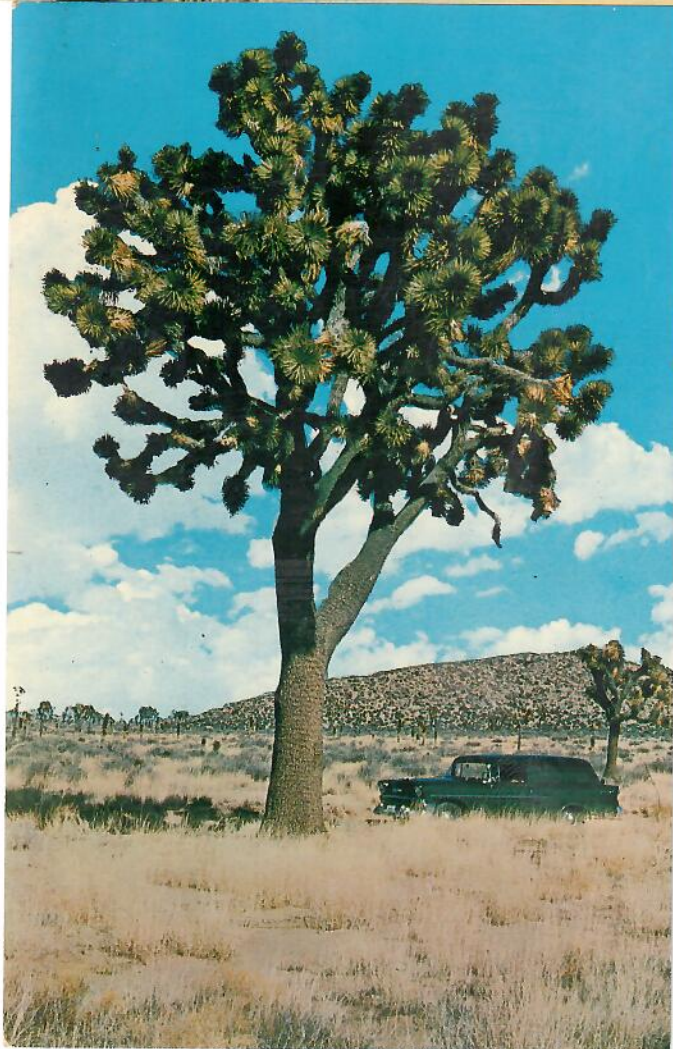

Here we see a spectacular Joshua Tree Forest and this rapidly diminishing plant is one of the most spectacular botanical features of our western desert. Strange as it may seem, it belongs to the Lily family and attains heights up to 40 feet.

THE HIGH DESERT IN WINTER

Nothing is more picturesque than deep white snow covering the high deserts of the West. Scenes like this do not occur very frequently and the snow never lasts very long but it is beautiful to behold.

GIANT JOSHUA TREE

The rapidly diminishing Joshua Tree is one of the most spectacular botanical features of our western desert. It belongs to the lily family and attains heights up to 40 feet and its cream-white blossoms grow in clusters 8 to 14 inches long at the ends of heavy angular erratic branches. The Mormons gave this giant yucca the name Joshua Tree or the "praying plant" because of the up-stretched "arms". The trunk has no annual rings, hence it is impossible to determine their age.
