Tetiaroa is the only atoll, (Coral island in the form of ring, surrounding a lagoon) in the Society Islands. Tetiaroa, situated at 2h30 by boat (57km) from Tahiti. Once the vacation spot for Tahitian royalty, the atoll is widely known for having been owned by Marlon Brando. The charm of the island rests in the dozen of white sand motu around the crystal clear water lagoon, which is totally closed; there is no pass in the reef. Numerous birds took up residence on these motus, because of their tranquillity. The beaches of the atoll are among the most beautiful of the Society Islands, marrying the infinite palette of overalls with colors, sometimes unexpected, corals. Immerse you in a real decoration(set) of postcard, an idyllic place far from the greyness ...

Moorea, like the other Polynesian islands, was populated by navigators who arrived in large double outrigger canoes from Southeast Asia approximately 1000 years ago. In the 18th Century, Moorea was known as AIMEHO. At the origin of the name change, was the vision a Great Priest had on a "marae" of a beautiful yellow lizard (i.e. MO'OREA in Tahitian).

Marae are ancient stone or coral pyramid-shaped constructions with several layers, on which sacrifices sometimes took place. The oldest Marae in Moorea is the Afareaitu Marae, it dates back to year 900. You can easily visit the Marae on the road to the mountain viewpoint. The first Europeans arrived during the 18th century, the Englishman Samuel WALLIS, the Frenchman Antoine de BOUGAINVILLE, and the famous Captain James COOK in 1777. The Protestant and Catholic missionaries converted the inhabitants who are still regular churchgoers. The French Protectorate was established in 1842 and re-organized in 1848 and 1851. The Sixties were marked by spectacular economic growth fostered by the CEP (Experimentation Center of the Pacific) created in French Polynesia for French nuclear testing.

Since 1984, French Polynesia has a statute of internal self-government, with a Territorial House of Commons, a Government. After 20 years of autonomist government led by Gaston Flosse, since 2004, Tahiti enters in a phase of «Tahui» (change) with a plural government led by Oscar Temaru. The new leaders have difficulty in finding solutions in front of economic slump which continues. In spite of a tourism decline, the country continues to believe in its fate and gets ready for years to come to welcome even better their visitors. In May 2013, the autonomist party is back and it's now Edouard Fritch who is president and work to get the country out of the crisis.
