Subject: Request to visit the Sea Turtle Conservation Station, Koh Mannai, Rayong and to discuss and share knowledge and experiences of sea turtle conservation and management

Dear Regional Director,

In response to your letter dated 30 August 2012 (Reference: IOSEA/300812), We are pleased to welcome Mr. Douglas Hykle, Co-ordinator and Senior of the intergovernmental Indian Ocean – South-East Asian Marine Turtle Memorandum and Dr. George Balazs leader of Marine Turtle Research Program of NOAA, National Marine Fisheries Service Pacific Islands Fisheries Science Center, Honolulu, Hawaii, United States of America to visit the Sea Turtle Conservation Station on Koh Mannai on 8 October 2012.

For this occasion, we have invited Khun Somchai Mananunsap, Director of Southern Marine and Coastal Resources Research and Development Center, who had been working at the Sea Turtle Conservation Station, Koh Mannai for a decade to discuss and share experiences on sea turtle conservation.

Transportation will be arranged by the Eastern Marine and Coastal Resources Research Development Center.

Sincerely yours,

Suthep Jualaong

Penghu Tienhou (Empress of Heaven) Temple Historical Development

Penghu's Tienhou Temple was constructed over 300 years ago in the Ming Dynasty, it is the oldest Matsu temple in all Taiwan.

Tienhou Temple is commonly referred to as Matsu Temple, or simply Makung, which is the origin for the city name Makung. Tienhou Temple serves the major deity Heavenly Holy Mother, commonly called Matsu or Mother Matsu (Matsupuo), who is most widely worshipped of all deities in Taiwan folk religion.

Early pioneers, crossing the waters from Miao to immigrate to Taiwan, often accompanied by stormy seas, would specially worship Matsu to guarantee protection the crossing. In the 23rd year of Qing emperor Kang Hsi's reign (1683), Shi Lang led the navy to attack Taiwan. After Taiwan was annexed, outstanding military achievements were attributed to the protection of Matsu, a reflection of the depth of Matsu faith in southeast coastal areas. In 1684, the Qing court ordered that, what had been called Tienfei (heavenly concubine) since the Song Dynasty, would be raised to Protector of the Land and People Wonderful Spirit Declared Merciful Empress, and ordered all government departments to change the name Tienfei Temple to Tienhou (heavenly empress) Temple, to enjoy eternal sacrifices in Spring and Fall.

From the Qing dynasty, the Tienhou Temple has been renovated many times. In 1919, under Japanese occupation, renovations were made under the altar area, digging out the plaque commemorating Shen You Rong's Order to Repel the Red-Haired Barbarians. In 1922 the Tienhou Temple wall had tilted to the point it could no longer be used, so Penghu Taishia Association provided funds for the largest scale renovations ever--the present appearance of Tienhou Temple. Mr. Shi Bo Lan was in charge of the renovations and completed the work in 1923.

Tienhou Temple faces south with its back to the north, constructed with a front hall, main hall and Refreshing Breeze Pavilion on three levels with left and right side protective dragon halls, all forming a unified structure. Because the foundation is sloping, the building follows a rising grade. Viewed from the side, the walls rise in uneven undulations, a most unique feature of Tienhou Temple construction. The rear of the front hall and anterior of the rear hall act as coordinated opposites. Previously, the Refreshing Breeze Pavilion was used by members of the Scholars Association. Presently on display is the commemorative plaque Shen You Rong's Order to Repel the Red-Haired Barbarians, stone tablets and other cultural relics.
