Xi calls for faster development of island as an international resort

President Xi Jinping visited fishing villages and talked with the seamen and maritime militia in Tanmen township of Qionghai city in Hainan on Monday afternoon after the end of the Boao Forum for Asia Annual Conference 2013, China Central Television reported.

The local people had been fishing in the South China Sea since ancient times, referring to it as the "ancestors' sea".

Xi told the militia they needed to learn how to use modern equipment and improve their working capabilities.

The maritime militia members should not only lead fishing activities, but also collect oceanic information and support the construction of islands and reefs, he said.

Boarding a fishing boat that had just returned from a fishing expedition, Xi asked about the fishermen's income level and their work, including how long they spend at sea for each fishing trip, how many people are on a boat and which kinds of fish they catch most.

Xi extended wishes of a happy family and good life to the fishermen.

"Congratulations for coming back safe and sound," he said. "May you get a catch every time you set sail."

Lu Chuanan, 43, whose fishing boat was boarded by Xi, said the president was deeply concerned about the fishermen's livelihoods during the visit.

"He asked us whether it was safe or not to go to the South China Sea," he told the Changjiang Daily. "He shook hands with everyone on the boat."

Xi said he loved sailing in the past, but he was too busy to set sail now, Lu said.

Ding Zhile, head of the Tanmen Fishermen's Association, said that Xi asked how many permits the seamen must get before they are allowed to fish, according to a Hainan Daily report.

"I told him that we fishermen feel safe as the country's safeguarding vessels are protecting us," Ding said. "Hearing this, the general secretary was happy and shook hands twice with me."

During the trip, Xi also visited an agricultural industry park and encouraged the development of modern ecological agriculture. The Hainan provincial government should speed up efforts to build it into an international tourism destination by 2020, in keeping with a State Council guideline, he said.

As China's biggest special economic zone that was approved by the top legislature in 1988, the island province enjoys late-comer advantages and has great potential for development, Xi said, according to a Xinhua report.

Parents fed up after another case of baby formula tampering

Papers slam fiddling with Swiss product but also flay watchdogs for failing to publicise the case

News on Thursday that a Swiss-owned brand of baby formula was being pulled from shop shelves in Shanghai following allegations that one of its mainland distributors had mixed the imported formula with out-of-date product came as a bombshell for mainland parents, already frustrated and angry after numerous food safety scandals.

Xile Lier, which distributes Hero Nutraderense infant formula in nearby Suzhou (蘇州), Jiangsu (江蘇) province, was accused late last year by the city's quality inspection authorities of changing sell-by dates on packaging, mixing products and relabeling formula for older babies as more expensive milk for younger children.

Authorities ordered the distributor's production line stopped but the product continued to be sold in shops until last week.

An editorial carried by The Beijing News said the recall of 1.3 tonnes of Nutraderense came like "thunderbolt" to mainland parents, many of whom switched to foreign brands of baby formula on the assumption that they were safe after the melamine-tainted-milk scandal of September 2008. Domestic brands including Sanlu, Mengniu and Yili were found to have used the adulterated milk in their infant products. Six children died and more than 300,000 were made ill.

Official assurances that 99 per cent of baby formula is up to standard have failed to deter mainland mothers from buying foreign brands.

Some mothers, not satisfied with domestically produced foreign brands, pay a premium for infant formula produced overseas, such as Hero Nutraderense, which is made in the Netherlands. Others travel to Hong Kong, Europe and the US to make their purchases.

"Producing substandard baby formula not only deceives parents but puts young children at risk," The Beijing News said. "It's high time manufacturers were punished and consumers compensated."

Hero has denied wrongdoing, saying that neither Xile Lier nor any other Chinese company was authorised to repackage its product.

Other media outlets blamed food safety authorities for their role in the scandal. Suzhou's quality inspection authorities ordered Xile Lier's substitution operation closed in November after several customer complaints.

But four months later, a China Central Television broadcast revealed that sales of the product had not only continued but had actually increased, because the authorities had neither ordered a recall nor informed the public of the repackaging incident.

"Of course shameless businessmen must be criticised for endangering children's health, but we must also question the chaotic regulation of food quality, production and distribution," The Beijing Times said.

The Qianjiang Evening News asked why Suzhou's quality inspection authorities were unable to detect problems when the Suzhou Food Safety Office was in the same industrial park as Xile Lier's now-closed production line.

"The scandal was covered up for four months, so regulators shouldn't be surprised by the outcry," said Modern Express. "With no recall or publicising of the incident, where was the responsibility of authorities? Were poor Chinese mothers kept in the dark while sales increased? How could anyone not get emotional and angry about this?"

The Qianjiang Evening News said the dereliction of duty by food safety regulators was even more serious than the product tampering.

"The brand's harm to consumers is limited once they stop buying it, but regulators' dereliction of duty erodes public confidence in the whole market, and raises concerns for governance as a whole. For consumers, dereliction of duty is the nightmare that never ends."

The Oriental Morning Post said authorities owed the public an explanation.

An Introduction to Guangzhou Silk Industry Museum

Jin Lun Guild Hall was first built in 1st year of Yong Zheng in the Qing Dynasty (1723). It has gone through almost 300 eventful years and was the location of Guangzhou silk industry assembly in the Qing Dynasty.

Guangzhou silk industry and foreign silk trade have a long history. The silk industry initially developed in Lingnan areas during the Qin and Han periods. The archaeologists unearthed such silk products in Nanyue Wen King 's tomb in the West Han Dynasty as light silk, yarn, cotton, and hemp silk. During the Tang and Song dynasties, Guangzhou silk industry became prosperous and "Canton Silk" became known for its delicacy. Since the Ming and Qing dynasties, "eight silkworm harvests a year" and "mulberry fish ponds" in Guangzhou were developing better and better. Silk from Guangzhou was then the best around the world, surpassing Jinling and Suhang areas. Guangzhou gained an unprecedented prosperity. At that time silk and silk products exported to all over the world came from the south of the Yangtze River as well as the Pearl River Delta centered Guangzhou. The silk trade also contributed to the development of the silk industry in Guangzhou.

In 10th year of Tong Zhi in the Qing Dynasty, 1871, China's first modern machine spinning mill—Hou Yi Spinners was established in Shamian, Guangzhou. In 1872, an overseas Chinese businessman of Guangdong origin, Chen Qiyuan established Ji Chang Lng Filature in Jiancun Village, Nanhai County, Guangzhou, marking the beginning of China's mechanic filature. Famous overseas Chinese leader Zhang Bishi set up Guangzhou Ya Tong Firm at Rainbow Bridge in Xiguan in 1909, which was the first firm in Guangdong to use modern mechanic weaving.

As a place for businessmen in Guangzhou silk industry in the Qing Dynasty to consult and to host activities, Jin Lun Guild Hall has not only witnessed the developing of the silk industry in Guangzhou, but also has become one of the important evidences of the Maritime Silk Road, carrying a valuable historical value and a high artistic value.

Fate of Nesting Green Turtle, HK2

Early October 2012

According to satellite telemetry, the turtle was taken out of water ²⁰¹² since Oct 8, then located at Bai Sha Gang of Xu Wen County of Guangdong Province (廣東省徐聞縣白沙港) since Oct 9. The signals terminated since Oct 14. ²⁰¹²

According to the locals and authority, the turtle was found entangled and dead in a static fishing net (named 丁子網/ 定置網) by fishermen and shipped back to Bai Sha Gang of Xu Wen. The local fishermen buried the turtle along with the satellite tags and flipper tags in the sandy beach of Bai Sha Gang respectfully. Upon my communication with the local authority¹, the officials recovered the buried turtle on ²⁰¹² Oct 18 to take photos and retrieve the tags. The turtle was re-buried on site and tags transferred to Ms. Chen Ling 陳玲² of Administration of Ocean and Fisheries of Guangdong Province (广东省海洋与渔业局, <http://www.gdofa.gov.cn/>). The officials agree to meet and take us to the burial place for site visit.

Conference turns spotlight on Taiwan's turtles

Taipei Zoo hosted July 2 the Turtle Conservation in Action Conference 2013, a major international event focusing on global efforts to protect endangered species such as the endemic yellow-margined box and Asian yellow pond turtles.

The location of the meet was particularly pertinent as the ROC capital is host to the island's largest and most stable population of the two species, in the Feitsui Reservoir catchment area, Taipei City Government announced.

"Conservation of turtle species in Asia has long been a major global issue," said Liou Ming-lone, commissioner of the Taipei Feitsui Reservoir Administration. "The high economic value and easy transport of wild turtles means they are in unprecedented danger throughout South Asia, Southeast Asia and East Asia, including Taiwan.

"This is especially true of the yellow-margined box and Asian yellow pond turtles. The International Union for Conservation of Nature has placed them on its red list of endangered species, and they are also covered by the U.N. Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora."

Turtle conservation experts visited the reservoir on the eve of the conference to examine efforts to preserve the endangered turtles. The group included Peter Paul van Dijk, the chair of the IUCN Species Survival Commission's Tortoise and Freshwater Turtle Specialist Group, and Sung Yik Hei, the head of conservation at Hong Kong's Kadoorie Farm and Botanic Garden.

Conservation measures taken by the TFRA over the past 20 years have yielded concrete results, Liu said. Since 1996, more than 400 different individuals of the two endangered species had been recorded in the reservoir area, making them the island's largest and stable population, according to a survey conducted by Chen Tien-hsi, professor of the Institute of Wildlife Conservation at Taiwan's National Pingtung University of Science and Technology.

TFRA has already requested the Forestry Bureau under the Council of Agriculture to upgrade the protection status of the reservoir's catchment area, so as to provide the wild species with an undisturbed habitat, Liu said. (SDH)

U.S., Chinese leaders meet in California

Star-Advertiser news services 6/8/13

PALM SPRINGS, CALIF. >> U.S. President Barack Obama welcomed Chinese President Xi Jinping on Friday to a California desert summit that will test whether personal chemistry can surmount the issues bedeviling ties between the world's two largest economies.

Obama said the goal in two days of talks was to "forge a new model of relations between the two countries based on mutual interest." The two leaders met for the first time since Xi became president in March.

The two men, in dark suits without ties, shook hands and met briefly with reporters outside in the 115-degree heat before beginning their private talks. Obama said the U.S. "welcomes the continuing peaceful rise of China" and said the two powers should work together on problems such as climate change and North Korea.

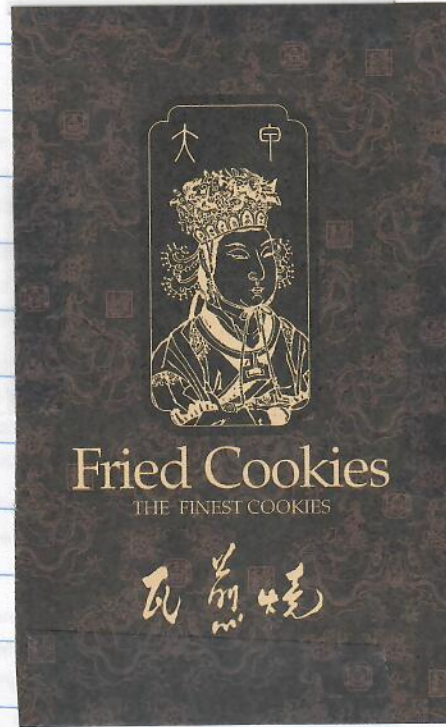

Xi said the talks reminded him of the historic 1972 meetings between President Richard Nixon and Chairman Mao Zedong, which led to the normalization of relations between the longtime adversaries. No policy breakthroughs are expected from the meetings with Obama and Xi, according to White House aides who briefed reporters on condition of anonymity.

The Chinese leader predicted "fresh momentum" in the relationship. "When I visited the United States last year, I stated that the vast Pacific Ocean has enough space for the two countries," he said. "I still believe so."

"Continuous and candid conversation is critically important for shaping our relationship for years to come," Obama said. Relations have been strained recently by issues including China's increasingly assertive stance in the waters of the South China Sea.

The U.S. president, who was criticized during his 2009 trip to China for being overly deferential to his hosts, said he would "continue to emphasize the importance of human rights."

On Friday, only hours before the two leaders met, China granted passports to the mother and brother of Chen Guangcheng, the blind lawyer and activist whose flight from China last year turned into a diplomatic drama between the two countries.
