Alerts issued for Typhoon Soulik

PRECAUTIONS: After the Central Weather Bureau issued its typhoon alerts, a number of cultural events were canceled and travelers were advised to avoid coastal areas

BY SHELLEY SHAN
STAFF REPORTER

The Central Weather Bureau yesterday issued sea and land alerts for Typhoon Soulik, adding that the nation would be affected by the stormy weather both today and tomorrow.

News of the typhoon sent retail prices of vegetables up by between 20 percent and almost 100 percent due to the increase in demand, Taipei Agricultural Products Marketing Co said.

The annual Yilan International Folklore Festival, which started last weekend, also announced that its venue at Dongshan River Park would be closed for the weekend.

Tourists visiting Taroko Gorge and Green Island were asked to leave due to the approaching typhoon. Those insisting on going to Green Island were asked to sign affidavits saying that the government is not liable for their safety.

Cloud Gate Dance Theatre (雲門舞集) called off its free performance at Freedom Square in Taipei tomorrow night because of the storm.

Taipei City's Department of Sports said the 2013 Yangmingshan Cross-Country Race will be held as scheduled on Sunday, but that the organizers will determine today whether any changes should be made to the route.

In addition, the Ho-Hai-Ya Gongliao Rock Festival (貢寮國際海洋音樂), which began Wednesday in New Taipei City (新北市), was suspended yesterday. A new date for the five-day festival will be announced later.

As of 5:30pm yesterday, Soulik's center was located 790km south east of Yilan. It was moving in northwest at 22km. The radius of the storm remained at 280km. The storm was packing winds of up to 173kph, with gusts of up to 209kph.

Gusts of wind generated by the typhoon could reach level 17 on the Beaufort scale. According to forecast that its power would be further reduced.

"We estimate that the radius of the storm will hit land on the east coast this afternoon," she added.

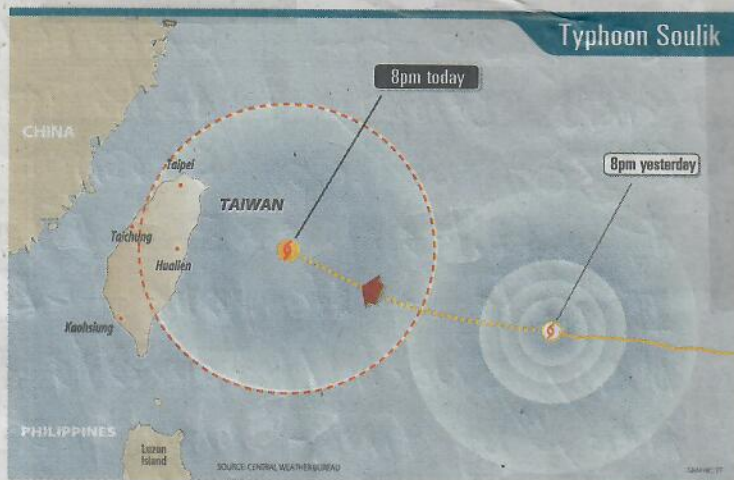

The bureau forecast that the typhoon would sweep through Taiwan from this evening until tomorrow morning by coming close to land in northern areas.

However, the bureau did not rule out that the typhoon's center could make landfall, she said.

Wu said rainfall would start to occur in northern and northeastern regions this morning, and become stronger in the afternoon and evening.

Strong rainfall is also expected occur in central and southern areas.

Residents in the mountainous arreas in central and northern Taiwan must be particularly careful of possible disasters caused by the torrential rainfall, she said.

"If the typhoon makes landfall, people in the mountainous areas in southern Taiwan must be prepared to brave the torrential rain as well,"

Wu said.

The bureau said that the radius of the storm could gradually move out of Taiwan tomorrow afternoon.

People on the nation's outlying islands would have to wait until Sunday morning, it added.

the bureau's Web site, wind speeds exceeding level 11 signify a very high risk of serious damage.

The sea alert applied to vessels operating in off the northern, northeastern and southeastern coasts and the Bashi Channel.

Wu Wan-hua (伍婉華), a senior specialist at the weather forecast center, said the bureau had detected 3m tall waves in the nation's southeastern coast yesterday afternoon.

The height of the waves in the northeaster coast had reach 1m as well. Travelers are advised to cancel trips to coastal areas as waves and wind are expected to become stronger when the typhoon approaches land, she said.

Wu added that Soulik had weakened a little, adding that the bureau

Liuqiu Church's elder and ukulele teacher shares his life story and his music skills to proclaim God

Reported by Simon Lin
 Written by Lydia Ma

In an attempt to reach new heights in its evangelistic ministries, Te-Sheng Presbyterian Church decided in 2011 to do more than what it had grown used to doing. Instead of partnering with its daughter churches, the church travelled to Liuqiu Island to visit Liuqiu Presbyterian Church held a short-term mission there.

During this, Te-Sheng Church's associate pastor Rev. Hu Mei-ni got acquainted with Liuqiu Church's elder Hong Shi-chih, who was a high school teacher, and she learned that he had begun teaching a new ukulele class. Rev. Hu learned from Hong that ukulele was an instrument suitable for young and old people because it was very easy to learn. She also came away very touched and impressed by his passion for evangelistic outreach and hoped that one day Hong would come to her church and share his testimony with her congregation. She also hoped that he would bring his students along so that they could perform at her church.

When Hong and about 10 of his young students were finally able to visit Te-Sheng Church on April 13-14, 2013, Hong shared his testimony and performed a few tunes with his students and the congregation gave them a warm and passionate welcome. "I am very grateful to God for giving us this opportunity to come and perform," he said, adding that the students had only been learning for about 2 years and they sometimes grew bored or tired of practicing. The church's invitation had provided these young pupils a new goal and a new inspiration. It had also helped them overcome some of their shyness and build some self-confidence.

When he was invited to share his testimony during the worship service, Hong recounted that he had put his job on hold to get a Ph.D. 3 years ago. However, one month before his oral defense, he discovered that he had cancer. The disease forced him to quit his studies and cast a dark shadow over his life. After 6 months of chemotherapy, he slowly recovered his health and began to think about how he would live the rest of his life.

Not knowing whether the cancer would return later on in life and not willing to face God empty handed in heaven, Hong decided to spend the rest of his life proclaiming the gospel. It was at this time that God opened a way for him by introducing him to an instrument he had never heard before – the ukulele – and inspiring him learn it and later use it to serve God. He also discovered that young people would be interested in the ukulele because it was easy to learn and it wasn't long before he was able to start teaching ukulele lessons at his church and at other churches.

Hong told parishioners from Te-Sheng Church that the ukulele is very easy to learn and teach, making it a suitable instrument for churches to use as a means to draw people into church by offering ukulele classes. Furthermore, the ukulele is a small instrument that's very convenient to carry around for outdoor outreaches. Another good thing about the ukulele is that it only costs a little bit over NT$1,000 to purchase one. This means that churches only need to spend about NT$10,000 to NT$20,000 and they can start a brand new outreach ministry at a relatively low cost.

Hong also shared that his church asked his pupils to play the ukulele during an Easter outdoor outreach event while the grown-ups shared the gospel and the background music was very helpful in setting the tone for the event.

Furthermore, the ukulele also became a means for the church to stay in touch with kids in the community after they had attended the church's summer camp. In the past, children from non-Christian homes would stop coming to church once its 5-day summer camp ended. Now, with the help of the ukulele, children from non-Christian homes keep coming back to church for lessons. As result, these children now practice Christian tunes often and have many opportunities to hear the gospel.

Google Street View 'Trekker' to capture scenery of Taiwan

TAIPEI TIMES

STAFF WRITER, WITH CNA

Google Inc unveiled its Street View "Trekker" — the compact backpack version of its Street View cars — for the first time in Taiwan yesterday.

Google on June 10 said it was bringing the Trekker to Taiwan to shoot images of scenic spots that Street View vehicles have a hard time reaching.

At a media briefing yesterday, the US firm showed how the Trekker took pictures of the Bixan suspension bridge in New Taipei City (新北市) — which is only open to pedestrians — to include the bridge in its local Street View service.

The device consists of a backpack outfitted with a camera system and its portability enables operators to gather images while maneuvering through narrow spaces or exploring locations reachable only on foot, Google said on its Web site.

The Trekker runs the Android operating system and has 15 lenses angled in different directions so images can be spliced together into 360° panoramic views which will be featured on the Google Maps service, the company said.

Google has already photographed more than 10 hard-to-access locations in Taiwan with the Trekker, Wei said.

Using cameras installed on vehicles such as cars, bicycles and trolleys, Google has captured views of 90 percent of the nation to date for its map services.

The smaller Trekker device is being introduced to image the remaining 10 percent and a contractor has been hired to manage the project, the company said.

"We appreciate the support of the government and local authorities, with whom we will try to promote Taiwan's beautiful natural scenery," said Cynthia Wei, manager of Google Street View Greater China and Southeast Asia.

She said Taiwan is the second country in the Asia-Pacific region in which Google is operating a Street View Trekker project, after launching one in Japan last year.

Google started its Street View project in 2007 in the US, collecting images of streets by using cars packed with computers, cameras and GPS devices.

Ocean park drowned by huge waves from Soulik

PARK PANIC: A storm surge caused by the typhoon hit the park, asphyxiating hundreds of animals after disabling an oxygenation system and causing millions in damage

STAFF REPORTER, WITH STAFF WRITER
Giant waves brought by Typhoon Soulik caused extensive damage to Yehliu Ocean World in Yehliu (野柳), New Taipei City (新北市), last weekend, killing more than 500 marine creatures housed in the park's tanks.

The 23-year-old theme park, located on the northern coast, was hit in the early hours of Saturday by a surge of waves churned up by the storm.

"At about 3am, a huge wave slammed over the park's sea-front levee wall. The wave swept through the parking lot and broke through the glass doors of our front entrance," park manager Liao Chun-wei (廖俊維) said. "It was like a tsunami. The churning water knocked down two security guards on duty, but luckily they were not seriously injured."

"It was a scary scene, like something out of a movie," he added.

The security guards said they thought they were going to die.

They recalled hearing a loud bang when the wave broke the glass doors and looking up to see a half-meter high wave flooding in, sweeping them off their feet.

"It was a scary scene, like something out of a movie."

— Liao Chun-wei, Yehliu Ocean World manager

"The seawater kept advancing, pouring into our aquarium and into marine life cultivation tanks that are kept in the basement," Liao said.

The tanks' oxygenation system was shut down by the rushing seawater, starving more than 500 sea animals of oxygen, including fish, eagle rays, blacktip reef sharks, puffer fish, moray eels and snapping turtles, Liao said.

"Fortunately, the 11 dolphins and seven sea lions that are the stars of the park's regular performances were unharmed," Liao said.

"Other parts of the building were also damaged by the storm and some pieces of metal sheeting from the observation deck on top of the building were blown away," he added.

Overall, Liao estimated the park incurred about NT$5 million (US$167,000) in damage.

"When a natural disaster strikes, we have no place to hide, no way to get away from it," he said.

The park has been shut down indefinitely, pending clean-up efforts and restocking of marine animals.

History

During the Qin Dynasty (221BC–206BC), the area of today's belonged to Xiang Shire and the central government of the Han Dynasty (206BC–220AD) set Xuwen County administering the whole Leizhou Peninsular. It was one of the earliest departure points on the Marine Silk Road. The population spiked during the Tang (618–907) and Song (960–1279) dynasties.

French colonial period

For more details on this topic, see Guangzhouwan.

The region was still a small fishing port when it was occupied by the French in 1898. The next year, the French forced the Chinese to lease a small enclave of Zhanjiang to them for 99 years as the territory of Kwang-Chou-Wan. The French wanted to develop the port, which they called Fort-Bayard, to serve southern China, in parts of which France had exclusive rights to railway and mineral development. Their efforts, however, were hindered by the poverty of the surrounding land. The French retained control of the region until 1943, when the Japanese occupied the area during World War II. At the end of the war the region returned briefly under French rule before being formally returned to China in 1946 by general Charles de Gaulle, then French head of state.

Post-World War II

Following the establishment of the People's Republic in 1949, Zhanjiang developed new importance. In 1955 a rail link was built to Litang in Guangxi province, where it joined the Hunan-Guangxi Railway. Since then, Zhanjiang has developed into a major modern port serving southern China, usable by ships of up to 50,000 tons. In 1984 Zhanjiang was designated one of the "open" cities of China, where the central government invited foreign investment; this spurred the city's further industrial development. It has shipyards and engineering works; automobile, electrical-appliance, and textile plants; and sugar refineries, flour and rice mills, and chemical works. In the early 1990s a new rail line was completed, linking Zhanjiang with Guangzhou, the provincial capital. The line was later extended to Hai'an, at the southernmost tip of Leizhou Peninsula, where trains could be transported by Guangdong-Hainan Ferry across the Hainan Strait to Haikou.

Until the introduction of Pinyin spelling, it was often known in the west as "Tsamkong" due to the Cantonese pronunciation of the name.

Military

Zhanjiang is headquarter of the South Sea Fleet of the People's Liberation Army Navy. It is also home base to two marine brigades.
