Kuibishan and Chi Islet

Kuibishan, one of the eight old sites of Penghu, is located on the northern shore of Beiliao Village, Husi Township. It is commonly known as "Guibishan" according to a legend stating that there are many Guibi (turtles) at the foot of the hill.

Chi Islet is on the eastern shore of Beiliao Village. It is an oval-shaped islet with the length of 120 meters and width of 60 meters. At low tides, a basalt gravel path appears to have a connection with the Beiliao Peninsula.

The range of this geological park includes Kuibishan, Chi Islet, and their neighbouring waters. The major geological facts are basaltic volcanoes, sea erosions, and Fanzai stones - basaltic stones rich in olivine. It is a site not to be neglected for tours or field trips.

Walking along the Kuibishan hiking path, you can take in the beautiful view of basaltic seashores, the broad sea-eroded plateau and sandbank of Fanshuzaiwei Islet. Climbing up to Kuibishan, you can look out the north to Yuanbei Islet and Niao Islet, the northeast to Jishan Islet, Xiaobaisha Islet, the east to Dinggou Islet, and the southeast to Chapo Islet (Husband Islet) and Chamu Islet (Wife Islet).

TAIWAN

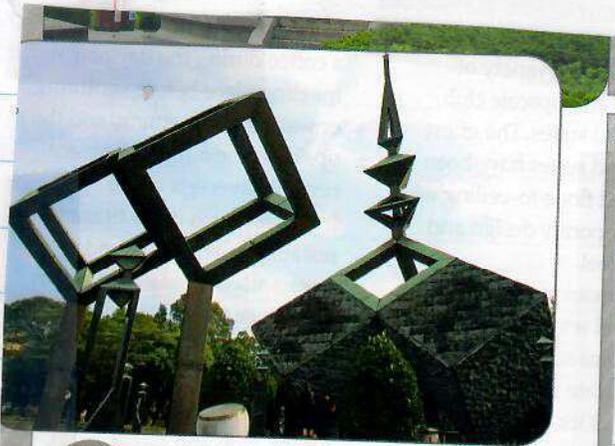

GUANG HUA DIGITAL PLAZA

Taiwan is famous for its electronics, and other than its own brands, it also makes components for many famous international companies. Every local will tell you that a visit here is imperative for those into gadgets. But the name Guang Hua has a deeper meaning for the Taiwanese.

The mall had humble beginnings when it opened in 1972 beneath a overpass at the intersection of Xinsheng South Road and Songjiant Road. In 1979 it was where second-hand electrical appliances were left behind by the departing American military. It then morphed into a place where local Taiwanese, many of them students, made a living by selling electronic goods to foreign buyers. The current six-story behemoth of stalls selling hardware, software, DVDs and used books was founded in 2008 and it is the largest market for technological products in Taiwan under one roof. Prices are competitive and negotiating is commonplace. Visit guanghuamall.com.tw.

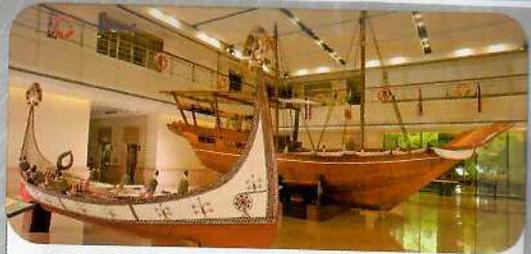

228 PEACE MEMORIAL PARK

Right across the street from the National Taiwan Museum is an open space of historic significance. It's here to remind people of a brutal chapter in the island's modern history, and at the same time represents the openness of today's Taiwan. On February 28, 1947 an uprising against the newly established Kuomintang government was violently suppressed, leading to the death of tens of thousands. Talking about the incident was taboo for years until, in 1995, President Lee Teng-hui became the first government leader to address what happened publicly, opening the subject for discussion.

If the purpose of this park is to set the souls of those victims to rest, it has truly succeeded – this park feels peaceful and serene, and the Chinese pagoda in the middle is, unsurprisingly, a popular spot for photos. The Taipei 228 Memorial Museum is located at the southeastern corner of the park. Open 10:00 AM – 5:00 PM every day except Monday and the day after national holidays; entry NT$20 (US$0.70). Visit 228.taipei.gov.tw (Chinese only).

EVERGREEN MARITIME MUSEUM

If you love the history of sailing then this is as close to heaven as you can get.

In the lobby, you are greeted by a life-size model of a carvel-built boat of the Taos, one of Taiwan's aboriginal tribes, and a dhow. Inside, records from both West and East – and from different eras – are documented and carefully presented with exquisite model ships in the permanent exhibition, with themes such as "Chinese Ships," "Sailing Ships" and "Primitive Boats."

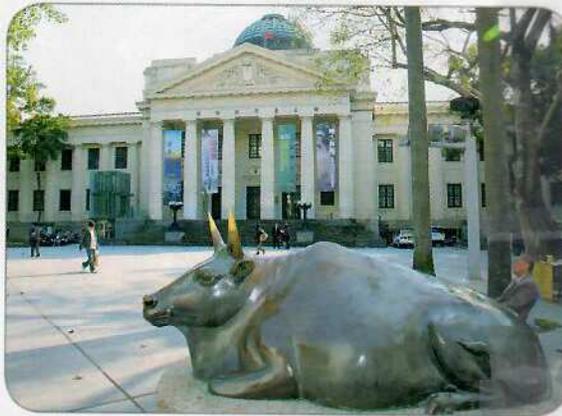

There are miniatures of grand dames such as HMS Sovereignty of the Seas, powerful battleships such as Aurora and, of course, the Titanic. English guided tours can be arranged with two week's advance notice. Full adult entry fee is NT$250 ($8.50); open 9:00 AM – 5:00 PM Tue-Sun, closed on Mondays and Chinese New Year's Eve. Visit evergreenmuseum.org.tw.

NATIONAL TAIWAN MUSEUM

This museum near the Presidential Palace often slips under the tourist radar but it should not be overlooked. Established in 1908, this house of history is the oldest in Taiwan and the only museum still in operation since the Japanese colonial era. It was set up as the Taiwan Governor Museum to commemorate the inauguration of the North-South Railway, and many of the regular exhibits are related to trains.

There are five departments – anthropology, earth sciences, zoology, botany and education – where you can learn about the island's indigenous animals and plants as well as the life of its early inhabitants. Unfortunately, a lot of the information boards are in Chinese with only token English descriptions, but coming here to admire the architecture alone is worth the time. Also, other than the special exhibitions, entry is free. Open every day 10:00 AM – 5:00 PM except Mondays. Visit formosa.ntm.gov.tw.

LAO WANG JI BEEF NOODLES KING

This may be the name of the place, but it's not going to help you much, even if you know how to read Chinese characters – this noodle shop is apparently so famous among locals that it has not even bothered to put up a sign. Tell the taxi driver to take you to "Tao Yuan Jie" and you will be taken to a small street lined by eateries.

The only queue in the street will be at this place, whose entrance is tucked away in a small side alley called Lane 11. No one speaks English here, so hand signals are the way to go. While in line, when a member of staff shouts out something at the door, gesture how many people you have with your fingers, as this might help you get a table more quickly. Once inside, just do the same thing to indicate how many portions you want. Yes, they do serve kimchi, pig's trotter, pork ribs and so on, but you will soon realize very few people are going for those. Stick with the beef noodles, for NT$150 ($5.00). Tel +886 937 860 050.

Exciting Observations of Numerous Green Turtles Foraging in Coastal Waters of Liuqiu Island, Taiwan

January 2013

In October 2011 we attended a sea turtle stranding workshop in Taiwan. After this informative and enjoyable meeting of turtle specialists, our colleague Prof. I-Jiunn Cheng kindly invited several of us to visit Liuqiu Island (Latitude 22° 20' 19.12''N, Longitude 120°22'11.34''E) (in Chinese 小琉球) of Pingtung County in Taiwan (See maps 1-3 attached). A 20-minute ferry boat ride 15km off the west coast of Taiwan, the island is only 6.8 km² with coral and rock fringing reefs, clear water, several sandy beaches and three boat harbors. With a human population of about 12,000, local residents make their living primarily by distant-water fishing and tourism from Taiwan. The island is famous for its rich Tao and Buddhist temple culture.

In November 2012 we returned to the Liuqiu Island again for cultural respect for the Liuqiu Wangye Worshipping Ceremony (迎王平安祭典) only held every 3 years. For several days a large beautifully constructed replica of a boat is transported for worship by hand around the island along with the Palanquin of Wangye. Using tons of 'paper money' the boat is then set on fire on the beach and entirely burned to ashes.

Two of our friends, local conservationists Tien and Sophia at the Ocean Blue Hostel led us to the cliff at the spot "Camping Area", in the north of Liuqiu Island, to observe foraging green turtles in the late afternoon on 8 November 2012. During the observation from the cliff, seven green turtles were found foraging on the algal mats grown on the limestone in the shallow waters of approximately 1 metre deep. Among the seven turtles, four were adults including 2 females and 2 males, while the other three were juvenile green turtles, which seemingly positioned themselves in deeper water farther away from the shore.

In the afternoon (2-4pm) on 9 November 2012, we snorkeled a short segment of the coastal waters of the island with the local conservationists Tien and Jian-wei. The journey started from "Beauty Cave" ending at "Vase Rock", north of the Island, spanning for some 800m to 1km in total distance. During the snorkelling trip, an amazing 40 or more green turtles were observed vigorously foraging on algal mats that abundantly thrived on limestone flat rocks in shallow waters extending seaward from the cliffs. These turtles ranged from 30cm to over 100cm in carapace length, with over 50% being post-pelagic juveniles to juveniles while all others were nearly mature adults. These foraging green turtles were good in body shape and healthy during the underwater observations. They were generally tolerant to our presence at an approximate distance of 5 metres. One turtle had a fishing line entangled at the base of its left forelimb. Efforts to rescue it for disentanglement were unsuccessful. Of interesting note is that we encountered a large female green turtle with a blue plastic tag attached at the midway of its right forelimb. The tag was overgrown with algae so any inscriptions on the tag could not be obtained. The same turtle has been observed residing in the area for at least three years, as advised by the local conservationists.

We are sincerely thankful for the hospitality and friendship of Tien, Sophia and Jian-wei, and all the other wonderful people met at Liouqiu.

Except in the Hawaiian Islands we have never seen so many green turtles foraging in such a short length of coastline. We plan to visit Liouqiu Island again soon to snorkel, enjoy, and learn about green turtles feeding at other coastal locations. The following images, some kindly provided by Tien, Sophia and Jian-wen, give views of the wonderful experiences we had at Liouqiu involving green turtles, local people, and their rich culture.
